

Hi Family!

Hope you are doing well. Just wanted to give another update on how guide dog college is going. Training is going well. I learned how to travel safely around traffic. It took a lot of studying and focused, but I think I handled it well. I continue to learn new things too. I finally learned how to travel on escalators. Boy, are those things fun after I got the hang of it. I know how to find escalators, elevators, doors, and stairs for my instructor. It is fun to see how excited my instructor gets when I find things for her. Now that I'm going to busier places like Burbank, there are more things that try to distract me like good food smells and dogs that want to say hi to me but I don't let it distract me. I try my best to stay focused. Next, on my list of things to learn is train and metrolink travel. We get to go to Pasadena for that. Also on that list is learning how to travel when there are no sidewalks. Crazy, right?!

My roommate and I have a great time when we both have a break from training. All the volunteers and kennel techs give me extra enrichment too. The jollyball and nylabone are my favorite toys. Miss you, but still have more to learn here.

Wags & kisses!
